SWEET TEES OFF ON "BIG JIM"

Henry W. Sweet of Bessemer, gubernatorial candidate running against James Folsom, exploded what he called a bomb shell in a speech in the ex-governor's home town of Cullman Saturday. Waving what he purported to be 21 photostatic copies of bank deposit slips for Folsom from the period June, 1946, to February, 1947, the man who "Big Jim" fired as head of the state docks claimed Folsom deposited $14,000 in the bank during that period.

Maybe Alabama's ex-and next did make the deposits and maybe he didn't. One thing for sure, if there had been anything illegal about the transaction Sweet would have turned his evidence over to proper legal authorities instead of exploiting the item as a McCarthy. With all the investigation that has been going on in connection with the current charges against Ross Clark, Folsom's brother-in-law, if there had been any way at all to drag "Big Jim" into the courts, it would have been done.

It would have been much more damaging to Folsom had the evidence been brought to court and proven to be illegal in one way or another. It was not done because there wasn't any wrong-doing. Sweet would have been laughed out of the courts with his photostatic copies of bank deposit slips. Clever lawyers who do not have anything on which to build a defense of their client, attack the witnesses, questioning their truthfulness and motives and running down their character. Sweet is following this type campaign. He's not running for governor, but against Folsom.

In the meantime Elba's favorite son continues his campaign for the governor's chair and consolidates the huge lead he has built up over the rest of the field. He has been attacked before and always come out with colors flying as he is doing now.

CONGRESS FACED REALITY IN TAX CUTS

During the past week the House of Representatives faced up to a critical issue and voted on the side of good business sense. While allowing some tax cuts to go through, they decided against any drastic lowering of taxes that would throw the budget far out of kilter. Now it is up to the Senate to follow suit.

It would have been extremely bad judgment to lower taxes without first cutting expenses. Tax cuts that create a larger national debt would put a shaky foundation under the economy.

What should be done is reduce governmental expenses, get rid of waste, allow for payments on the national debt and then cut taxes.

The nation still has a debt of around $275 billion. That is not just a bookkeeping item. It is important after 22 years of deficit financing that the budget be balanced.

Every farmer and businessman knows that a debt cannot be ignored. In business it is a heavy load that keeps a man from modernizing his plant and making other improvements. Payments and interest bleed away the money that could make for a more efficient operation. The same is true in government.

Taxing the rich man to support his less fortunate and less ambitious brother does not work, either. It is estimated that if all personal income over $10,000 a year was confiscated by the government, such tax would supply only enough funds to pay the interest on our present day debt.

Whether the average wage earner and farmer likes it or not, he eventually is the one who is going to pay for the extravagances of the United States government. Subsidies and guaranteed markets which look so necessary now are costly and eventually will have to be paid for—not by the Gotrocks but by Mr. & Mrs. Coffee Countian.

AVERAGE CITIZEN HELPS GOVERNMENT WASTE

All the government waste is not to be found in Washington and its myriad bureaus. In their own little way local citizens help hike the cost of government and its services.

The specific example that comes to the fore right now might seem to be a minor one but it still represents waste on the local level. At the post office during cold weather the percentage of people who close the door after them is rather small.

Not a single person in Elba goes into his own home on a cold day and leaves the door open behind him. Fuel to heat the house is too expensive to be used to warm up the entire state.

Yet that same person coming in and out of the post office will leave the door swinging wide and let the heat escape, even though he is the one who foots the bill for the fuel. This lack of public responsibility when multiplied many times most certainly is a big item in the cost of government. It is waste and unnecessary expense that could be avoided.

How public irresponsibility can build up into a big item was seen during the war in Europe. Factories in the United States were turning out enough tires for all the trucks and jeeps in that theater. The Navy and merchant marine were getting them to France and the supply services were issuing them to the troops. But the American soldier, through one irresponsible act, was running these tires so fast that an order was issued forbidding the use of spare tires. There weren't enough to go around is spares were issued.

The GI would thoughtlessly throw his empty can on the road where a truck or jeep tire would roll over it and get cut up. This happened in such proportions that more tires were ruined or sent to repair shops with tin can cuts than through normal wear and tear and enemy action.

Our grandfathers had the old saying that through want of grease a wheel was lost; through want of a wheel a wagon was lost and through want of a wagon a battle was lost. Because the U. S. factories provided so much for the American troops to waste, they were able to go ahead and win the war. But the cost was tremendous and now that same soldier who thoughtlessly raised the cost of victory is burdened with the cost of his own carelessness through high taxes.

On a smaller scale, the Elban who goes in and out of the post office during cold weather and lets the door stay open, is raising the cost of the service to himself and his family.

PEANUT OIL MARKET SHOULD BE DEVELOPED

On a recent trip to Oklahoma City the writer had a chance to see whether or not peanut oil was consumed on a per capita basis like it is in the Wiregrass. From quick observation of grocery advertising and trips through super markets, it is safe to say that people in that part of the country have not been educated to the advantages of using peanut oil for cooking and frying.

While the peanut farmer sits in the Wiregrass trying to eke out an existence with a small acreage allotment and guaranteed price, the manufacturers of shortening and other vegetable oils are taking over a profitable market. Peanut oil is a superior product but housewives over 200 miles from the center of the Wiregrass have not been educated to its use. If every peanut farmer would put up 25¢ for each ton of peanuts he markets, it wouldn't be many years before he would have a market for every peanut he could grow.

What LAURIE BATTLE Believes An ALABAMA Senator Should Be

LAURIE C. BATTLE
The Veterans' Candidate for U. S. Senate

Son of Rev. W. R. Battle, Methodist minister 40 years, serving churches throughout Alabama. Worked way through college. Fought as a Private (World War II) promoted through ranks to Major. Named 1 of the 3 outstanding Democratic Congressmen. Married, father of 3 children.

He should be a loyal Southern Democrat—everywhere and all the time. He should stand up and speak out for our people's customs and traditions, not only here in Alabama but also wherever they are threatened.

He should be completely fair to all—farmers, labor, management and white-collar workers, always recognizing that the public interest must come first.

He should be fearless in voting his convictions regardless of offense to any clique or faction.

He should be alert to see that our State receives its fair share of Federal expenditures and agencies.

He should work full time for all the people of Alabama and keep constantly and closely in touch with them.

He should be diligent and earnest in the discharge of his duties and appreciative of the serious responsibilities that rest on him.

He should patriotically place above all else the security of the United States of America.

If This Is the Kind of Senator You Want Vote for LAURIE C. BATTLE for Senator

SHORT STORY

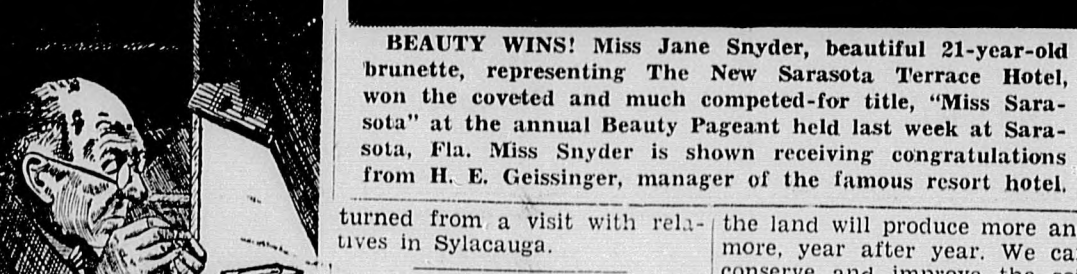

III Wind

By F. L. Rowley

MAX MILLER was a wise old man. He had spent nearly three score years peering into mechanical clocks—setting them, oiling them. Antique shops all over the state would call on Max to breathe life into ancient timepieces that brought fancy prices in a limited market. Of late the market had become so limited that Max was scarcely able to eke out his modest living.

"Afraid I'm going to be forced to close shop Johnny," Max said to one of his gloomy attendants as we stood before the many paneled windows watching the churning snow outside. "It seems nobody has enough energy to wind clocks these days—everyone wants electric gadgets."

"Maybe business will pick up," said encouragingly, yet without conviction, I knew that the grandfather's clock, the ornate cuckoo

the land will produce more and more, year after year. We can conserve and improve the soil so that future generations will have the same abundant life we now enjoy. But to do this we must use the best soil and water conservation practices we know. And we must fit these conservation practices to the land of each field, each farm and each watershed.

SOIL CONSERVATION
L. W. Hataway, Kinston, was turning a good crop of lupine recently. He says he makes a better crop where a good cover crop has been turned.

Lupine adds nitrogen and organic matter to the soil. It keeps the soil from getting hard and makes it easier to cultivate. Where a good cover crop is turned under the soil will absorb more water and there is less runoff.

Productive land is essential to the well-being of any nation and the people. Many nations do not have enough good land now to furnish a high standard of living. We are more fortunate in the United States, but even here we do not have any to spare. Most of our land has been set-aside since we settled it.

Fertile soil and the right amount of water are the main things that make land productive. A great part of our land had fertile soil when we first settled it. But erosion, over-cropping, oxidation of organic matter and leaching among other things have robbed the soil of part of its fertility. Much of our land had the right amount of water when we settled it. But increased runoff has decreased the supply of water in the soil on many sloping hillides while flooding and water logging have increased the amount of water in the soil of water lands. These and other things have greatly decreased the potential productivity of too much of our land.

We do not need to let the productivity of the land continue to decline. We can check and build up soil fertility and regulate the supply of water so that increased runoff has decreased the supply of water in the soil on many sloping hillides while flooding and water logging have increased the amount of water in the soil of water lands. These and other things have greatly decreased the potential productivity of too much of our land.

"Danged power-line down," declared Art. "Can't tell when to start cutting hair when to stop. Linnell's been down for a week, just that's what I hear. How much do you want for that big clock with the cracked face?"

"Twenty dollars," I said quickly.

Max purred. We both knew that the old clock wasn't worth more than three dollars.

"Guess I'll have to take it," Art said gravely. "These antiques sure come high."

I guess Max never will forget that day. Runners of a prolonged power-flicker created a heavy demand for window clocks. All day long folks tramped through the deep snow to pay fancy prices for old clocks. Max let me quote prices; even then he had difficulty in keeping a straight face.

"I just can't believe it Johnny, I can't believe it!" Max chortled as he emptied the till late that night. Bare spots on the shelves attested to the surprising volume of business that had followed the news of a power failure.

The phone rang. Max answered it. From the liveliest look on his face I thought that something terrible had happened.

"What's wrong Max?" I asked.

"Power's on again," Max whispered incredulously.

I began to laugh. After glaring at me for a few seconds Max got the idea. We laughed until the tears ran down our cheeks.

"And now Max, you can close shop," I said.

Max looked at me with a strange twinkle in his eye. Then, fondling the money that the 'til wind' had blown in, he announced happily: "Johnny, now I can afford to do what I've hankered to do for ten years—open an appliance shop—complete with electric clocks."

SAM MCCOLLUGH
Sam McCollough said the fish were biting fairly well in Rind's pond the day he caught this one. The story was a lot bigger than the fish, though, as he admitted he caught the two beauties using a grub worm and a hair hook. When pressed for details Mr. McCollough finally admitted the caught the two bass in Lake County, Fla. Saturday, March 6. The largest fish weighs 9 pounds. Altogether, Mr. McCollough reported snagging 40 pounds of fish in two hours of angling.

Alabamian Named to Be Newspaper Week Chairman for 1954
Jack Bonner, secretary-manager of the Alabama Press Association, will be chairman of the 1954 National Newspaper Week committee.

Others named to the 1954 committee are Vern Sanford, Texas Press Association; Guy Richard D'ew, Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association; Edwin O. Meyer, Virginia Press Association; William J. Oertel, Ohio Newspaper Association; and William G. Conley, Arkansas Press Association.

The appointment was announced by Glenn McNeil in Knoxville, Tenn. McNeil is the president of Newspaper Association Managers which sponsor the observance as well as secretary-manager of the Tennessee Press Association.

National Newspaper Week is traditionally observed Oct. 1-8. This committee of professional newspaper trade association secretaries will arrange for participation of many allied groups and will prepare a kit of helpful materials—cartoons, promotional suggestions, news and editorial copy—which will be supplied every daily and weekly newspaper in the United States.

Chairman Bonner has been secretary-manager of the Alabama Press Association for four years. He is a graduate of the University of Illinois School of Journalism and has had varied experience on weekly and daily newspapers in Illinois and Nebraska.

American Farmers Might Someday Supply Our Cork

WASHINGTON—American farmers may one day break the Mediterranean monopoly on cork. Some are now growing cork trees and in years to come could furnish the cork for bottle stoppers, motor gaskets and life jackets, among other uses. Portugal, Spain and North Africa now practically supply the world.

No synthetic substitute for natural cork has yet been found. Tiny air cells, as many as 750,000,000 in an ordinary bottle cork, may be the reason. Cork is resilient, compressible, light, almost impervious to gases and liquids and so frictional that clutch discs are made of it. Half the world supply is used in making linoleum.

Some time ago, a Baltimore manufacturer of cork products set out to be a modern-day Johnny Appleseed. Finding that the cork oak would grow in some 23 southern states from the eastern seaboard to the Pacific, this concern distributed thousands of free seedlings and acorns.

It outlined a scientific program of progressive plantings that was enthusiastically endorsed by the Department of Agriculture and many state governments. From 1899 until the present, millions of cork oaks have been planted in this country, largely on poor land that would grow little else of value.

Some cork is actually being produced, but this comes from old trees planted in California and elsewhere long ago.

Even if the manufacturer's plan is followed to fruition, it will be many years before the United States becomes self-sufficient in cork. The more slowly a cork oak grows, the better the bark, and in any event, it takes 20 years from planting to first stripping, 40 years before the bark is of good quality. Only once every 6 to 10 years can a tree be stripped.

Colored Markers Guide D. C. Driving

WASHINGTON—Motorists visiting Washington, D.C. are having less trouble finding their way around—unless they are color blind.

The District of Columbia has installed colored route number signs to indicate direction. Now, a motorist going from New York to Miami on U. S. Route 1 has only to follow the red "1" signs through the city. He is then assured that Washington traffic circles has not turned him completely around.

Should the same motorist find himself following a series of blue signs, he knows that he has reversed his direction and is headed back north. In the same pattern, eastbound route signs are green and westbound signs are yellow.

The marking system has met with mixed reactions. Most travelers agree it helps them to find their way through the city. Others have reservations. Colored signs, they say, are much harder to follow than black and white ones.

Using colors to indicate route is not new idea. Many cities around the country are using colored markers to indicate truck and through traffic routes that miss the main flow of city traffic. Old-time motorists will recall that long ago telephone poles along the road were painted to indicate certain roads.

Animals Are Taking Courthouse Building
CARTHAGE, Mo.—Some of Carthage's residents believe animals in the neighborhood have confused the Courthouse with a zoo.

Recently, a racoon, a weasel and an opossum were spotted on the Courthouse Square. A study of the situation led to belief that the coon and the weasel had established residence somewhere within the Courthouse building, although Mr. Opossum, perhaps because of his ability to hang around in out of the way places, still has everyone guessing.

A horde of starlings also seem to like the Courthouse neighborhood. They have been nesting in trees on the square. They're strictly for the birds and not so popular as the coon, weasel and opossum—they're accused of breaking the Courthouse clock by roosting on the clock's hands.

Korea Veterans Sticking With Chosen Courses
WASHINGTON—Korean War veterans taking G. I. training courses are making good at the business of getting an education.

The Veterans Administration says that fewer than 2 per cent of the 230,000 enrolled under the program have changed any of their courses.

The V. A. said this indicates that the Korean War veteran "has a clear picture of where he is going and how he plans to get there."

The law permits a veteran taking classroom, on-the-job or on-farm training under the G. I. Bill of Rights to switch programs only once. The V. A. said fewer than 4,000 have taken advantage of this privilege since the training program started 15 months ago.
